BOMB WRECKS AUTO OF A.F.L. OFFICIAL

BULLETIN
Detroit, June 28 (AP)—A bomb's explosion wrecked the automobile of an American Federation of Labor organizer early today. The blast hurled sleeping women and children from their beds in nearby houses. The bomb, which police said contained dynamite, shattered the front of the car of Joseph O'Laughlin, the A. F. of L. organizer and business agent of a truck drivers' local.

Johnstown, Pa., June 28 (AP)—Hundreds of unemployed workers returned to their jobs today at the vast Cambria plant of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation where a strike of the Steel Workers' Union has been in progress for 17 days.

Only indication of disorder came when a crowd of riotous and hooded night shift workers at the Franklin gate. State police escorted to safety six Negro workers menaced by the crowd. A brick was tossed through the window of a street car, which two of the Negroes boarded. Quiet prevailed at other principal gates of the mill.

F. R. Howells, superintendent at the company's principal entrance, said the number of men reporting today was "just about normal."

More of Irwin's Own Story

Upon his surrender yesterday, Robert Irwin, mad sculptor, told a dramatic story of the murder of Veronica Gedeon, her mother, and Frank Byrnes, a lodger. The first installment appeared exclusively in the Boston Sunday Advertiser. Irwin declared he meant to kill only Ronnie's married sister, Ethel, who had spurned his love. The night of the murders, he declared, he went to the Gedeon home, and found no one in. Later Mrs. Gedeon arrived. Irwin told Mrs. Gedeon he was waiting for Ethel. She ordered him out of the house—and he struck her. She put up a terrific fight—and Irwin said he was amazed the boarder, Byrnes, didn't hear her. Shortly after Mrs. Gedeon died, Ronnie came in. He said he didn't want to kill her—just held her so she couldn't scream. He held her for more than an hour, then killed her because she had recognized him. Before he left—realizing that Ethel wasn't coming home—he killed Byrnes so the latter wouldn't be able to identify him. Today Irwin continues his story.

EXCLUSIVE!

Chicago, June 28—After I put the Englishman out of his misery, then I got my stuff together. I had to hit him eleven times. Then I went in and took a little clock and pictures that belonged to Ethel. I searched the drawers for pictures of Ethel and I didn't find them. I found two of Ronnie. One of them was the profile, the other was a nude picture.

Then I got my stuff and went back to my room. I walked back to 50th street. Her apartment was on the corner of 52nd street and 2nd avenue. I went to my room and slept all day. I got home at 6:30. I never went any place but home. I washed the blood off in her bathroom.

There was not a drop of blood on my clothes. I slept all day and woke up hearing them calling extras. I spent the next week in my room, coming out only at night. Sunday morning I said to myself, "I am going to Philadelphia."

EXPECT IRWIN WILL PLEAD INSANITY

New York, June 28 (INS)—A bored and haggard Robert Irwin stood before the bench in homicide court today and heard himself formally accused of the triple Easter Sunday murders of "Ronnie" Gedeon, artist's model, her mother, Mary, and a boarder, Frank Byrnes.

The youthful sculptor, who has been talking himself into the electric chair, said not a word during his brief arraignment on a short affidavit.

He was held without bail for a hearing Wednesday. His indictment is expected by nightfall.

Irwin hired as his lawyer Samuel L. Landwehr, who has defeated 123 persons in first degree murder trials without one client going to the electric chair.

District Attorney Dodge carried off that he anticipates an insanity defense.

"I don't see how there can be any other defense," he said, "but in my opinion Irwin is sane. He knows the difference between right and wrong."

The young, one-time divinity student gave himself up to the Chicago Herald and Examiner, Hearst newspaper, Saturday, and was brought here by airplane yesterday.

Young women and old women crowded into the courtroom this morning, pushing forward as Irwin was brought in from the detention cell.

Almost before he reached the bench, the clerk was droning the short affidavit which charges simply "murder of homicide."

Irwin said nothing, was not asked to say anything. He stared straight ahead for a few seconds.

'I'm Pretty Lucky' Ethel's Comment

ETHEL GEDEON KUDNER
Calmly Goes Golfing After News

New York, June 28 (INS)—Ethel Gedeon Kudner today casually admitted that she was "pretty lucky."

That was the most dramatic statement that came to her lips after hearing that Robert Irwin set out to kill her. But instead she was spared, because she couldn't find Ethel. "The woman I loved—and hated."

After learning this, after reading Irwin's confession that desire for her inspired him to murder, Mrs. Kudner went golfing.

She drove to Jones Beach with her husband, Joseph, and her father, Joseph Gedeon. Ignoring reporters and photographers, she cheerfully spent two hours pursuing the little white sphere around the green-painted course. Once she playfully thumbed her nose at newsmen.

Joseph Gedeon was more composed.

IRWIN'S STORY TELLS OF FLIGHT FROM N. Y.

Blames Best Friend for Naming Him as Suspect; Bares His Early Life Struggles

'I, Robert Irwin, . . .'

The "artist's" hands of Robert Irwin, confessed slayer of beautiful young Veronica "Bonnie" Gedeon and two other persons, are shown here signing Irwin's own story, given exclusively to the Hearst newspapers. These same strong, ruthless hands, according to Irwin, slowly crushed out Miss Gedeon's life, after they had held her powerless and terror-stricken for two long hours.

period if it had not been for William Lankie. I had been to see him the day previous. He was one of the closest friends I had. That Friday night I went down and met Jack Johnson, fighter. He was in one of the five arenas. I told him the story that I would like to draw his picture. He was busy. The next afternoon I was going back to draw his picture. If I had done that, this thing never would have happened. I was always interested in prize fighters.

Blames Lankie

Friday afternoon I went to see William Lankie. He knew all about me and Ethel. He went to a lawyer friend of his who told the police that it would be a good tip to ask Bob Irwin about the killing, that I was moving. In one paper, the New York American, they said that the first tip came from Lankie. I left New York Sunday morning and went Sunday in Philadelphia. Then I read about the "mad scientist" in the newspaper, and I jumped a bus to Washington. I left Philadelphia Monday morning at 10 a. m. I bought a paper in Washington and there was my picture on the first page. I said to myself that the next guy I meet will recognize me.

I stayed in Washington all afternoon. Then I went out to the freight yards. I had done a lot of hauling, but had no freight car experience. I decided to go whatever way the freight went. I was up in the morning and the freight was moving. I met a regular man and gave him all sorts of tips. I traveled with him to Cumberland, Maryland. I stayed in Cumberland until 3 p. m. That afternoon I left for Chicago. I figured that they were looking for me in Chicago so I told him I was going to Chicago, but I had made up my mind to go to Cleveland. I got off the freight at Willard, Ohio, and then went on to Akron and then to Cleveland.

"You Did It!"

Whatever is coming to me, I'll take. When I went out of that apartment, the last thing I did was to look around. The last thing I said to myself there was, "Buddy, you did it!" If I don't get the chair, and I go to an institution, I want a dollar a week, because with that money I can make someone work for me to drill me in visualizing. I want to develop myself. In that vision I left in New York. I have it all written out, the complete explanation of this.

I killed Mrs. Gedeon because she caught me in the rage. I did it before I knew it.

I killed Bonnie out of necessity. I never wanted to see any of them except Ethel.

I was going to kill myself.

Byrnes Deaf, 'Not Coward'

New York, June 24 (INS)—

Partial deafness, not cowardice, cost the life of Frank Byrnes, rookery waiter found murdered in the Gedeon apartment.

This was the answer flung back by Byrnes' cousin, George Lang-fellow, today in an indignation in the dramatic confession made by and Robert Irwin.

Irwin said the answer waiter had cowered in fear in his room at the other end of the Gedeon flat, too chicken-hearted to go to the aid of Veronica Gedeon and her mother before he himself was slain.

"That's not true," snarled Langfellow.

"Irwin is all wrong. My cousin could have slept through an earthquake, he was so hard of hearing."

Then I was going to kill Ethel and myself. I thought, "No, if you only kill her, they will just look you up in the nut house."

I wanted to kill Ethel because I loved her and hated her. Even when I knew her before, when I made the best of her I was going to model her on a straight black, beheaded, with her hair hanging down and her eyes closed.

Found Ice Pick

I killed the Englishman at 4 o'clock in the morning, just before I left. I waited for Ethel all night, because occasionally she came in at 4 or 5 in the morning.

If Ethel had come in first, I would have killed her and anybody else, if she had come in while I was drawing her mother's picture.

I had an ice pick when I came there. I picked it up at 33rd st. near the building I was in. I took the pick on the Englishman stabbing him through the temple.

When I hit Mrs. Gedeon I knocked her down, but not out. I had to jump on her to keep her from squawking.

I am sorry that I was not able to—after this affair last night—to get out still. I had a book, because I could have put a whole lot better than I have done now.

I am certainly sorry that I killed all three of them. There was only one I was after and that was Ethel. I don't know whether it was hate or love that made me want to kill Ethel. My motive was to either die or put myself under arrest.

If I did not want to be the end of it. That cycle comes back. These people I killed aren't lost. They are bettered lives, and if I live, I will repay them.

I only meant to better one life. I will repay these lives by developing that power of visualizing, which is the next step in the evolution of the human race.

I will throw myself on the mercy of the court and they can do what they want to me. I will take it with my right up. I am not afraid to die. If I live, I will make my life good. I do not know where Bonnie is now, but she is some place, she is not lost.

When asked about immortality, Marconi said, "I cannot say, but it is not in keeping with the economy of nature that we should be completely destroyed."

I haven't been to church because I have been working Sundays. I went to one church in Philadelphia, but to none in Cleveland.

My contribution to civilization will be along this visualizing line. It is impossible to make it clear—the reason for these killings. First I wanted to kill myself, then I was going to take Ethel with me. I definitely was not interested in Bonnie. But I had nothing against her. I knew that her mother didn't like me, but if she hadn't of bothered at me, you're as good as dead here or I'll call the Englishman, she wouldn't have gotten it.

Ethel affected my life more than anyone else I had ever met. I thought that Ethel was a divorced or a separated woman. I hadn't seen her since December 1934. I did not try to communicate with her. I just gathered that she was living with her mother. They asked me where I was living and I didn't tell them.

Ethel worked with me for a while in visualizing. She would say, "You visualize me, as an ear, a nose," and I would. When she worked with me, I did twice as much as when anyone else worked with me. It is hard, mind-numbing, tiring work and she got tired of it.

Ethel said many times that she loved me. She wrote some rather nasty articles about me, or had a newspaper man write them about me.

I was born in this tent on this camp meeting ground near Los Angeles, August 3, 1907. My father was an evangelist preacher and so was my mother, Miss Crawford, who had charge of the work, was as similar to the Portland, Oregon. I grew up in poverty.

I never had any spreading money. My mother was a wash woman. My father deserted us when I was a very small child, when we were in Missouri. Then we went to Texas, living on a very wild ranch, just like Zane Grey stories. Then there was a blank in my life.

I lived in Hollywood during 1912 and I went to kindergarten there. Hollywood was like a similar country village then. We moved over to the other side of Los Angeles, Pasadena, where I was born. I grew up half-mad and always hungry. My mother and I had to go out and pick up wild nuts to eat.

Tired of Religion

I ran away from home when I was 14. I was old to fight Indians with another kid. Then my mother found me and put me in an institution where I could get sufficient nourishment. I was in Whittier State Industrial School. I had done nothing wrong, but there was no place for me. Then they sent me to Strickland Hall as an orphanage.

A year after I had run away from home or fight Indians I had moved her religious headquarters up there and she was making a big evangelist organization there. My older brother ran away from the Whittier School and went to Mexico and he never did get caught. I have never seen him since. I was 17 years old.

I grew up in Portland in poverty. My mother was deeply religious. I was sick and tired of her religion, but outside of that I loved her and she did everything possible to help me. She wanted to get me saved so that I could go to heaven. I simply sickened me. The thing that I rebelled against was the authoritarianism. She said, "The essence of religion is the elimination of personal desire and the sublimation of one's will

In conference with Attorney Peter Sabbatino, Mrs. Ethel Gedeon of New York shrinks away in horror as a reporter hands her a newspaper telling of how her death was plotted by Robert Irwin, her crazed "admirer," who went to an apartment to kill her, but instead killed three other persons, including her mother and sister. The sister was beautiful Veronica "Bonnie" Gedeon, New York artist's model.

It was a nude "Bonnie" Gedeon photograph similar to this that Robert Irwin, slayer of Miss Gedeon, her mother and a lodger, took with him from the Gedeon apartment in New York, after his triple crime, according to his confession, given exclusively to the Hearst newspapers.

Girl Gets $1000 For Irwin Tip

Cleveland, O., June 28 (AP)—The scullery girl came out of the kitchen today and followed a bewildering rainbow to its New York pot of gold.

Murder, paid the rainbow that arched Henrietta Kosciuszki's journey.

There was a reservation for her today on a New York bound plane.

There was another one for West F. Peterson, editor of the detective magazine which had offered $1000 reward to the person who supplied the information that would turn Robert Irwin over to the law to answer for the triple murders of last Easter Sunday.

"Sure, Irwin surrendered. He has been accused," Peterson said. "But we feel that if Miss Kosciuszki hadn't recognized his picture in the magazine and reported it, through the hotel manager, to Cleveland police, Irwin would never have been forced into flight and into surrender. She gets the dough."

Insanity Seen as Irwin Plea; Arraigned in New York Court

Although this photograph of Veronica "Ronnie" Gedeon, ill-starred young New York artist's model, was posed for commercial use, it seems to give a weird impression that Ronnie saw in the smoke of her cigarette a vision of the cruel fate which was in store for her. Covering her face, she appears to shrink from the dream-picture of her impending murder at the hands of her confessed slayer, Robert Irwin. His own story of how he killed Miss Gedeon, her mother and a lodger in the Gedeon apartment is being published exclusively by the Boston Evening American and other Hearst newspapers.

wheeled at a word from his attorney and returned to the detention pen, where the aid of Leliovich, whom Irwin had retained by telephone from Chicago, conferred.

CROWD'S REMARKS

As he marched from the room, exclamations of women spectators could be heard.

"He doesn't look so handsome. Why, he's just a young fellow."

And other such comments.

There must be something wrong with his back. Only one did Irwin smile. As he was led back to the detention pen, he clutched a newspaper with his name in the headlines. His face broke into a momentary grin.

Extra precautions were taken to prevent an attempt at suicide by Irwin. No one, but and also later was taken from him, and a special guard was placed in his cell.

Leliovich said he had to state, to make a point.

When Irwin was taken from the courtroom to a prison van, shades for the first time were put on him. The street was crowded. Every eye was on the air surrounding the van as it sped off.

Earlier, after an all-night grilling during which he repeated his confession made to Chubko in the Hotel Lincoln, he made a brief and hard appearance in the police lineup.

NO RE-EXAMINATION

Widely detailed plans for re-examination by the jurymen of the Gedeon apartment were dropped without explanation today.

"There will be no such re-examination," declared Defense Attorney Leliovich.

A few moments later, Police Commissioner Lewis J. Valentine confirmed Leliovich's announcement at a press conference. The commissioner did not elaborate his confirmation.

Leliovich declined to hazard an opinion on the nature of Irwin's defense, saying that he had seen his client for only a few seconds preceding the arraignment, but planned to confer with him for several hours at today.

Prior to the Leliovich "no re-examination" announcement it had been reported that Irwin like today would be taken to the Gedeon apartment to show, step by step, how the crime was committed. His fingerprints were to be compared with those found on the murder apartment, a formality that did not alarm Irwin.

"Sure I left my prints," he said, "they must have been all over the place."

District Attorney Dodge admitted the police have not yet obtained Mrs. Gedeon's signature to the "official confession" he made at dawn today, supplementing the one he made Sunday exclusively for the Chicago Hearst newspaper.

It was shortly after midnight when Irwin, strutting posing, was ushered into the office of Assistant Chief Inspector Lyons at headquarters, and the long, grating ordeal of questioning was under way.

DECLINES TO TALK

Only Irwin, who had talked on and on in Chicago to reporters, balked in the mood to talk. He talked, finally he spoke.

"I told my story once; that's enough," he said. "I won't say whether my confession as published is correct."

A 24-hour guard was posted to keep him under constant surveillance when detectives reported that he had said:

"I've often thought of killing myself."

Irwin stopped his constant dropping at cigarettes only long enough to eat, which he did at practically every invitation. His appetite was invariable.

GOOD-MEMORED AT FIRST

Irwin was delivered to the New York detectives in Sheriff Tomlin's office in Chicago early yesterday afternoon.

FUZZLED WHEN TO PLEAD

At that time he was taking it all in high good humor. It was much later in the day when he showed his first flash of temperment as he was being questioned on the lineup by Chicago's Chief of Detectives Sullivan. After the first few questions he said:

"I'm not here to answer questions if you'll pardon me. If I must, I would rather talk to you alone. You need a new man. But I don't want to stand here with everyone gazing at me."

Sullivan, taken aback, complied by taking him into a private office.

Previously, Irwin had talked uncooperatively to any and all comers. He would brag in one breath of his literary background and in the next he would launch into a fiery description with gestures of how he killed Ronnie and her mother and Byrne.

One point rather puzzled him. "I don't know whether to plead guilty and show myself as the mercy of the court, or whether to plead insanity. Would you do it?" he asked a reporter.

It was like a holiday to Irwin coming from his actions when he flew back to New York. He preened himself in his natty clothes.

He smiled broadly and was more like a delighted boy than a self-confessed triple murderer. It was his first airplane flight—said probably his last.

As he heard the airport, he joked with his guards. He viewed with almost childish enthusiasm the great airplanes as they roared away. He cried delightfully.

"Which ship are we going to fly in? This is my first flight."

Attendants assisted the New York police in hustling him into a big American Airlines ship. He disclaimed the numerous flashlights and stood in admiration as the giant motors of the ship droned in their warning-up.

With a farewell wave, the young artist dashed down into his seat where Owens bade him, and the great ship soared.

CHATS WITH GUARDS

Until far beyond Detroit, Irwin chatted and joked with the accompanying police and newspapermen, who apparently did not share in his mirth.

Once his eyes glared wildly, and pointing to his auditors, he said:

"You know what I am going to do? I'm going to stand up before that court, tell my true story and let them do with me what they please."

"I don't give a damn what they do."

Finally he leaped into a tight slumber, and awoke at the rumble of the liner's wheels on Floyd Bennett field.

Irwin was brought here following his sensational confession in the office of the Herald and Examiner. He was accompanied by Hearst newspaper reporters and a photographer and was accompanied by two New York detectives.

He had waived extradition. About 3000 spectators were at the Chicago airport as Irwin, dressed in white, puffing at a cigarette and surrounded by Detective Frank Carmine, went aboard the plane. As appeared entirely comical.

WAIVES EXTRADITION

Before going to the airport, Irwin had been taken to the sheriff's office and the detective bureau.

The sheriff's office was called by Irwin as an extradition waiver. Later the detective bureau he was photographed and fingerprinted.

Irwin declined to answer questions asked by Chief of Detective John J. Sullivan, when he was made on a telegraphic request from Chief Inspector John J. Heery.

VISIONS HAUNT HIM, TOO

The mask of callousness and bravado had dropped from the face of triple-slayer Robert Irwin in this picture. Moodily smoking, he seems to be thinking back to that blood-stained New York apartment he left early Easter morning, after he had taken a last look at the bodies of his three victims, lovely young Veronica "Ronnie" Gedeon, her mother and a man lodger. Irwin is shown here as he appeared just after he had made his confession exclusively to the Hearst newspapers.

Ronnie was in the bedroom when he asked her. With a note of contempt in his voice, the mad soulster declared:

"Ronnie didn't put up a fight at all."

"But I didn't want to kill her. I held her by the throat, tightly enough that she couldn't scream but not so tightly that she could not breathe. I held her there for what seemed like hours, wishing there was some way I could tie and gag her, so she would be out of the way."

It was dark in the bedroom, and I didn't think she knew who I was. I had tried to disguise my voice. But she did recognize me. She called me by name, and begged me not to attack her. She pleaded she had just had an operation."

When Irwin realized the girl knew his identity, he said, he felt that the only thing he could do was kill her, so she might never speak of the murder.

"I strangled her," he said, his voice sinking almost to a whisper, "then I saw off the bloody undergarments she wore. I don't know why, but I want to make this clear—I did not attack either of these women."

Long hours had passed from the time Irwin had strangled Mrs. Gedeon, and it was nearing daylight as he prepared to leave the apartment. He thought of Byrne who had been asleep in another room the entire time.

There was another witness who must be silenced. The knock he had found in a gutter was used for the first time, as he stabbed Byrne eleven times. Irwin had spoken, earlier, of Chubko when he was almost captured on Friday.

"I told her with all the force I had. She fell down, screaming. I jumped at her and seized her throat in my hands! She clawed my face until blood through much of his life.

"If I had been born in affliction," he said, "these three might be alive today—Ronnie, her mother, and that Englishman, Frank Byrne, their comers."

"Poverty breeds crime. It breeds insanity and disease."

As he spoke, it did not sound like an excuse. He was speaking with an air of resignation—a boy telling of facts which he could not control.

He spoke of suicide—and I guess that may perplex you. How could suicide add anything to a man's spiritual or creative power? Suicide is death, isn't it—the end of everything? Well, I don't think so.

"It is my theory that nothing is lost; that is why I say I only borrowed those three lives. I don't know whether it was half of love that made me want to kill Irwin."

"I will repay those lives by developing that power of visualizing which is the next step in the evolution of the human race."

He spoke of the strange problem of "visualizing," which, he said, dominated his life, and declared:

"I don't get the chair. I want to go to an institution. I want a dollar a week, then—because with that money I can get some one to drill me in visualizing. I want to develop myself. I want to develop myself. I don't know whether it was half of love that made me want to kill Irwin."

'Ever Since Eve' Her Beauty Bars the Way to Permanent Job

Margery's New Position Ends Like Others

FROM an original story by Gene Baker and Margaret Lee. Screen play by Lawrence Riley and Earl Baldwin. A Commonwealth Production soon to be released by Warner Brothers.

What Has Happened

Margery Morrison is a skilled secretary and stenographer, but she has one great handicap—her unusual beauty. Invariably her bosses become too afraid. Margery knows that she may either retain her job or her self-respect. She always retains her self-respect, and goes job-hunting anew. Margery and her best pal, Sue Rogers, live together in a little apartment. Sue hasn't the "fatal curse of beauty," and so retains her job. After a fight with her boss, Mason, president of a Purty League, in which Margery has to throw heavy books at him, she lands another job the same day with Lowell, Barton & Henderson, importers. They are all good looking, well-dressed and alert men, and poor Margery wonders which one of the trio will make the first pass at her.

Now Continue

CHAPTER V

At noon on Margery's first day at Lowell, Barton & Henderson's office, the three started out for luncheon together and they all eyed Margery, first with surprise, then smilingly. They had not seen her when they came in.

By 5 o'clock all three had called Margery in to take dictation, had asked her name and had complimented her rather effusively on her ability.

At home, that night, in reply to Sue's query as to the new job, Margery said, "Easy work, but put me on record as saying that it will last only about three days."

Margery was wrong about it. She worked there nearly a month. It got on to the routine office work of filing, taking dictation, filing and so on, as all done by the other girls. Margery kept getting letters from the three partners. They were almost effusive in their kindness.

At three o'clock, suggested taking Margery out for lunch—on the dinner, but Margery found some excuse or other.

Then came a night when the whole force worked rather late. Margery had a page or so more time to finish what the other girls were through and departed. They had no more than gone when Mr. Lowell peeped in.

"Mr. Morrison," he said, coming over to her. "You, Mr. Lowell?" Margery typed as she spoke.

"Wonder if you'd mind staying for an hour or so. I am sure you'll find it interesting."

"Oh, I say, Miss Morrison, you can't be here. I have dinner sent up here."

"But there was one thing Margery didn't know about—Mrs. J. J. Walsh. She came into the office one afternoon as Walsh was dictating.

"What's this, James?" she yelled at him.

"My dear, one moment please. I am dictating," Walsh protested.

"You told me that you always hired men stenographers," she cried, glaring at Margery.

"The last four I had were so inefficient. This young lady is thoroughly efficient, my dear."

"She is not," Mr. Walsh said. "She is as inefficient as I am."

Margery showed back her chair, glared at him and then turned to the typewriter. She was dictating. She was dictating. She was dictating.

Margery Morrison (Marian Davies) finds her good looks a definite handicap in her search of employment. She sights the danger signals and leaves new job only to run into more misfortune when the boss' jealous wife sees her.

"That's the usual line," she said. "No, it's quite true. What I meant was that I have a couple of letters to get out, must go on the midnight plane for New York. So you mind coming in with your book."

"I have a few lines more to write you," Mr. Henderson said.

"Oh, you, finish that. Bring in your book."

He went back to his office. They all had the same brilliant idea at the same time. Margery thought. She got up at once and got her things. She knew well enough that her working days were over for Lowell, Barton and Henderson.

Out in the hall she met Swedish Anna, who scrubbed the offices. Margery held a bit of whispered conversation with Anna, slipped her a quarter and went down on the elevator.

A little later, through the darkness, came Lowell's voice. "Oh, Miss Morrison," there was a knock on her door.

"Come in," she called. "What is it?"

"There is Miss Morrison," Lowell demanded, sharply.

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

"She's out here," Lowell said. "She's out here."

The cashier grinned at her. "Sorry, Miss Morrison," he said. "I know you couldn't stay with us five minutes after the Battle-Are saw you. It's always like that."

"He is the best man I ever worked for. Tell him I said so will you?"

"Sure he's a swell guy. Why is it all the swell guys get such lessons for wives?"

Margery couldn't answer that one.

He said to pay this week in full, and give you two weeks advance."

"Oh, the poor, sweet old thing!" Margery said as she took the money.

As she went out and started to cross the driveway into the building, she saw a young man just driving out. She dodged back in time. The young man eyed her and almost collided with a passing car.

Margery was quite used to being eyed by admiring males, but this time she stood and watched this handsome young man as he passed.

turned and drove away. She watched him until he was out of sight.

"Well, for Heaven sake, Margery," the first time you ever gave a man a second look."

"I'm a long time that has no turning. Eventually Margery ought to land a job that she can keep and at the same time keep her self-respect. And how about this first young man to ever rate a second glance from her?"

Margery said to King Pattern King, Inc.

Incorporate CUCUMBERS In Summer MENUS

FROM MARTHA LEE'S MONDAY MORNING BROADCAST OVER STATION WEEI

WHAT place will cucumbers play in your summer menu planning? This crisp vegetable certainly comes into its own right during the hot weather.

We do not know the origin of the expression "cool as a cucumber," but we do know that cucumbers have real appetite appeal during summer.

In recent years the question seems to be to peel or not to peel the cucumber. Well, we do not wish to become embroiled in any argument on the subject, but we don't feel the reader owes when we are going to use them sliced.

Cucumber sandwiches with either a cup or a glass of tea seems just about the most pleasing combination that can be produced on a sweltering afternoon.

We've saved all of our time talking about our favorites and, anyway, the list of favorite cucumber dishes grows longer and longer as we think.

RAILROAD SALAD

1 can (2 oz.) tuna fish
2 medium-sized cucumbers
1 cup raw grated carrots
1 cup chopped nuts
Mayonnaise or salad dressing
Salt to taste

Wash the cucumbers and chill. Cut a slice lengthwise from each cucumber, then scoop out the pulp carefully. Mix the pulp with the grated carrots, flaked tuna fish, chopped nuts and mayonnaise with salt. Fill the cucumber boats with a crisp lettuce leaf and top with a teaspoon of whipped cream. At the stem of each boat place a teaspoonful of small square cheese crackers which represents the flag. Serves 4.

JELLIED CRABMEAT AND CUCUMBER SALAD

2 packages lemon-flavored gelatin dessert
2 cups hot or boiling water
1 teaspoon salt
1 cup vinegar
1 medium-sized cucumbers
1 can (10 oz.) crabmeat, flaked
1 cup flaked dried celery

Mayonnaise or salad dressing

Follow manufacturer's instructions for making the gelatin dessert and the boiling water. Then stir until thoroughly dissolved. Add salt and vinegar, and allow to cool. Meanwhile wash the cucumbers, then squeeze through cheesecloth to obtain 1 1/2 cups juice. This juice to the cooled gelatin mixture with a drop of green food coloring to tint it a delicate green. Chill until mixture begins to set, then add the flaked crabmeat and celery. Turn into individual molds and chill until firm. Unmold on individual beds of lettuce or watercress and serve with any desired dressing. Serves 6.

CUCUMBER ROAST

Select medium-sized cucumbers, wash and trim. Slice in half and peel. Hollow out seeds with a spoon. Fill with a mixture of minced meat, onion, salt and pepper. Bake in a hot oven for 1 hour. Remove from oven and let stand for 10 minutes. Slice and serve with a dressing of mayonnaise and lemon juice.

Place a little mayonnaise (with a dash of lemon juice) in the bottom of the shell and then fill with finely diced, minced cabbage, chopped red and green peppers, minced separately with enough mayonnaise to moisten. Bake in a hot oven for 1 hour. Remove from oven and let stand for 10 minutes. Slice and serve with a dressing of mayonnaise and lemon juice.

With the best of luck and the car at the other end. Move with French dressing.

Yes, it will be correct for you to have a married girl as a bridesmaid. This is a very common practice and is in no way improper.

WEDDING GIFT

DEAR MRS. BECKMAN: I am interested in a wedding gift. I have a small collection of books and I am wondering if it would be proper to give a gift of books to a bride and groom.

FASHION concentrates great interest on skirts this summer... ranging all the way from full-hipped fish-tail skirts of rough peasant linen, to straight lines that are slinky to the point of being hobbie if it weren't for a slit... pleats, narrow or wide, box or accordion are swishing all over the place... but it's sheer, flattering femininity that you're looking for, choose the whirling umbrella-pleated skirts. They sink down over the hips, blossom gradually into a froth of fabric at the hem-line that's grand to set off pretty ankles and sandaled feet.

Your summer wouldn't be complete without a chalk-white frock rhymed with brilliant color. So we offer the Fashion Congress selection modeled above by Miss Caroline Pierce of Milton. Note the accentuated bodice line, the pale belt strapped with blue and red to match piping at neck and sleeves.

The frock is around thirteen dollars. For shopping information, phone Annie Brink, Fashion Editor, Liberty 4000, week-days until five, or write her at the Boston American.

Your Figure, Madame!

SWIMMING MAKES THE BEST EXERCISE

By IDA JEAN KAIN

Swim for lovely curves, for swimming develops the normal curve of the waist while streamlining the body and hips.

By directing to each set of muscles their rightful share of work, it evens symmetry. This summer you can swim off an inch and a half from your hips, improve your chest and arms, and take your daily dose out in sheer fun.

Any swim stroke will save your figure. The old breaststroke may look antiquated, but it brings your figure right up to date by developing the chest and the pectoral muscles. In fact, the best stroke for the chest is the breaststroke.

Pessimism's Near Climax

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

The pessimists have been riding high of late and with the markets and general business news showing marked lack of vitality no one has more to dispute them. But there is an end to all things and just as the high has been reached, in March, when they unwisely permitted their enthusiasm to blind them, so too will the news come a cropper at the hands of headless pessimists.

After all the waves of strikes which started out as an ordinary phenomenon of industry was not suspected. Rather was it the introduction of new, untutored leadership that proved disturbing. And the news has been the case with the will and ability to enforce agreements had been in evidence. But as pessimism threatens to be accepted as evidence, comparison in Washington and various industrial centers reports of public opinion polls indicate that the pessimism has been in evidence. Economic Pattern Eyed

By HEARTLEY STANLEY RUKSTEDT

New York, June 28—Current trade statistics indicate that business has a stubborn capacity to take it. Neither disturbing nor legislative proposals nor the placing of important industrial furnaces under the control of the militia has fundamentally reversed the economic pattern.

Yet business obviously has not made the progress that it would have made under favorable conditions of tranquility in the political and labor field. It has never regained the recovery peak attained last December. It is currently running about 6 or 7 per cent below that level. Moreover, it has shown more seasonal recession from last month's basis. Yet there is steadiness at the current level, which is nearly 4 per cent above the level attained in 1935.

Obviously, the boom tendencies caused alarm early in the winter. But business has been cautious. From this juncture the objective must be to avoid a seasonal recession, with a parity between agricultural and industrial production, to provide the economic basis for full employment of labor, but the realization of such a goal will depend on human efforts to work out a basis for recovery. A reasonable long-term assumption is that the economic pattern will be formulated in due course.

It is perfectly evident that Tom M. Girdler, of Republic Steel, has undertaken to lead the steel industry in a campaign to make the steel industry a more important part of the economy. He has thrown out what he feels are the "old guard" and is trying to get the industry to recognize the need for a new leadership. He is trying to get the industry to recognize the need for a new leadership.

But it is misleading to envisage employers and employees as the two parties at interest. As Mr. Girdler, chairman of the steel industry, has eloquently pointed out, the steel industry is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy.

The effort should be to raise the steel industry to a higher level. When prices move in tempo with the economy, the worker finds that the steel industry is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy.

Incidentally, the current realignment of workers will not mean any more pay to increase efficiency. It will mean that the steel industry will be a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy.

But against this, there has been a 6 per cent rise in output per worker and a 28 per cent increase in output per unit of equipment. This, it estimates that the labor cost per unit of product is 8 per cent below the 1929 level. The cost of the steel industry is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy. It is a part of the economy.

Steel Operations Off in Week

New York, June 28 (AP)—Operations in the steel industry for the current week declined 3 of a point to 75.0 per cent of capacity, compared with 75.9 per cent last week, according to the American Iron & Steel Institute.

The American Iron & Steel Institute, which is the industry's official statistics bureau, said that the decline was due to a number of factors, including a decline in the demand for steel and a decline in the supply of steel.

SCOUTS INVADE CAPITAL FOR JAMBOREE

Washington, June 28 (AP)—Washington today had been invaded by a uniformed army from every corner of the globe, as the brown tents of 27,000 Boy Scouts sprouted on the park banks of the Potomac.

Four thousand boys already have arrived by train, bus, automobile, boat, plane, bicycle, motorcycle and afoot.

When the encampment is complete, and the world-wide silver anniversary "Jambooree" officially opens Wednesday night, there will be Scouts from every state in the Union and from 24 foreign nations.

There will be 15,000 boys on hand for dinner tomorrow night. Tents upon tons of food is on hand to feed hearty appetites.

The Jambooree, originally planned for 1935, but was cancelled at the last minute by the President because of a growing epidemic of infantile paralysis.

All of the Scouts, scoutmasters and officials are required to be housed in tents. Vast administration and house tents already are ready.

SEA HONEYMOON FOR ETHEL, FRANK COUPLE TO DASH FOR LINER

By DOROTHY KILGALLEN

Wilmington, June 28 (INS)—With their marriage only two days away, Ethel duPont and Franklin D. Roosevelt Jr. strolled hand-in-hand today over the green lawn of Owl's Nest, supervising the decorations for their wedding reception and planning a secret honeymoon.

"We're not telling," the President's son and his pretty fiancée smilingly insisted, when friends asked them where they would spend their honeymoon.

But a source close to the duPont family revealed that less than two hours after the ceremony, America's No. 1 bridal couple will dash to New York in a limousine driven by Tom, the duPont chauffeur. At New York, it was said, they will board the Italian liner Roma and sail for a honeymoon in the Mediterranean.

ELABORATE GUARD
Secret service men, state police and a corps of duPont retainers will facilitate their departure from the wedding reception—a detail of state troopers forming a motorcycle escort for the bridal car, the others blocking the roads until Ethel and Frank are well on their way.

A statement issued by the duPonts today admitted that "unusual precautions are being taken to get them out of Wilmington in such a manner that it will be virtually impossible to trail them."

These last days before the ceremony are crowded ones for the young couple. Yesterday they relaxed, skipped church in the morning, went instead for a drive in Frank's roadster, played tennis in the afternoon, with Mother and Father duPont looking on approvingly, and exchanged personal wedding gifts. Each gave the other jewelry.

BRACELET FRANK'S GIFT
It was said Franklin's present to Ethel was a bracelet he bought in New York on the way down from Harvard. Her gift to him was not disclosed.

Today they watched workmen put final touches to the great green and white striped reception marquee erected in the garden. Ethel wrote what amounts to the last of her thank-you notes. Working with only one secretary, the blonde heiress has acknowledged more than a thousand wedding gifts, and she expects to have every gift acknowledged before her wedding.

Tonight she and Frank will attend the final and most elaborate party of their engagement, a dinner dance in their honor.

It is estimated the couple will be pronounced man and wife at 5:21 p. m. Wednesday.

Risky Pacific Hop Next for Amelia
Port Darwin, Australia, June 28 (AP)—Amelia Earhart made ready today for the "worst section" of her globe-striding flight—from Lae, New Guinea to Howland Island, a 1,500 hop across the Southern Pacific out of sight of land except for scattering small islands.

From Howland she plans to fly to Hawaii and thence to California.

TROTZKY IN SEIZED FOR SABOTAGE

Moscow, June 28 (INS)—M. Bronstein, nephew of Leon Trotsky, exiled Bolshevik revolutionist, has been arrested on a charge of sabotage, it was reported today.

Bronstein, director of the Leninist Harbor, and his assistant, Captain Trofimov, were taken into custody by the GPU on charges of disabling 16 ships "under instructions of a foreign consul" according to the publication "Water Transport."

DENT TRO ARRESTED

Official sources in Moscow today issued in vigorous denial of reports that Sigismund Lavensky, noted Soviet Arctic flyer, General T. I. Albin, chief of the army air force, and Alexander Aronoff, president of the Society for Cultural Relations With Foreign Countries, have been arrested.

Absence of the three men from recent official functions led to rumors they had become entangled in the network of mass arrests being carried out for sabotage, espionage and counter-revolution throughout the Soviet Union.

Lavensky, who rescued the American airman, James Mattern, after a forced landing in Siberia in 1933, returned to Moscow today from Sevastopol, according to the foreign office.

"ON VACATION"
The secretary of Professor Otto Schmidt, who recently established an airplane base at the North Pole, issued a similar statement. Lavensky's absence from the reception ordered by Schmidt on his return from the Arctic on Friday started the rumors of his arrest. Aronoff's secretary said the cultural leader was vacationing at the resort of Brestok on the shores of the Baltic near Leningrad.

Body of Seaman Hunted as 'Wild' Boat Is Found

Hampton Beach, N. H., June 28.—Coast Guardsmen today searched off this port for the body of George (Red) Thompson of Kennebunkport, Me., a seaman believed to have been lost off the 35-foot cable cruiser, I Duma.

The boat was found running in circles and unmanned five miles at sea. Coast Guardsmen believe Thompson was thrown into the sea when the wire rope broke and threw him off balance.

The I Duma is owned by Francis M. Qua of Parkview avenue, Lowell, who hired Thompson to pilot the craft from Annisquam to Wells Beach, Me.

Edmond Goran, a fisherman from Hampton Beach, sighted the runaway boat and struggled for several hours to board the speedy cruiser as it cut wide circles in rough water.

Francis M. Qua, a summer resident at Drake Island, Me., is a brother of Judge Stanley E. Qua of Massachusetts Supreme Court. The I Duma was found undamaged after it had been towed into Hampton Beach except for the broken tiller rope and missing pilot's seat that had been wrenched from the deck.

ICC Decisions on Mass. Motor Pleas
Washington, June 28 (AP)—An Interstate Commerce Commission examiner recommended today the Interstate Bus Corporation, Springfield, Mass., be authorized to operate as a common motor carrier between Providence, R. I., and Schenectady, N. Y.

The commission itself denied the Old Colony Coach Lines, Inc., Boston, authority to operate as a common carrier in Maine, New Hampshire and Massachusetts.

BANK HEARING LEGION DRAFT ON LOANS VICTORY SEEN

Attorney John W. Coughlin came for the receiver of the Federal National Bank, attempted today to show that the state bank committee made any criticism of certain loans, involving the trust company affiliates of the Federal.

He forecast passage at this Congressional session of the act, which will take the profits out of war.

In an address prepared for delivery at the Maine Legion Debutante's annual convention, he described the act as a "throughly American proposition" that would end "profiteering and its handmaiden, inflation."

Rodeo With Casey

ED DON GEORGE, THE LAST OF the college-boy wrestlers who have worn the purple stomacher with the diamond navel, or the gold haberdashery or jewelry signifies the ultimate peak of the wrestling profession, is having a go at Steve Casey, the Irish fisherman, tomorrow night.

This is a continuation of the never-ending round between the lodge brothers to see which is the better box office attraction and therefore the logical winner.

It will be held at Fenway Park, and I think you should be there to study a dying and almost extinct race of college boy wrestlers who pretty soon will be a morbid memory of the public's passion for educated athletes.

The wrestling industry has contracted a big ache in the boxoffice in late years, and the shaggy old walrus-like Gus Sonnenberg, Jim McMullen, Joe Savoldi, Century Milstead and other ex-collegians who elevated wrestling from a boresome drudge into a profitable entertainment, have either come apart, wandered away to start waffle shops and hay farms or joined some opposition circus.

The recent importation of foreign elves, fresh from sod and better days, has equalized the high standard of the college-boy era in the depression day when the public needs something strong to see its own suffering and find the least of two grizzlies.

It is a pity that a very successful line of panthers for the professional wrestler.

I was very glad to find a man who had to fight his third rat, a professional wrestler who had won a common world motion picture to work off their passions for the ceremonial baton of the winners.

Collegians No Longer a Treat
BUT THE PUBLIC IS RESTING MORE comfortably now and the novelty of a college boy, with his fresh idealisms and cultural gloss, heaving large hunks of hairy meat to great altitudes, is no longer a tonic.

In fact the people's pain has abated to such an extent that they are creating their own sufferings at the horse and dog tracks in order to fill the hollow where their old ache used to be.

As a college boy, I have seen the time when that great benefactor of the human race, the horse, was used to fill the void in the lives of the college boys who were not yet old enough to see the world.

So many was an instantaneous success, and at his zenith had more bookings for his act than he could possibly fill by railroad or airplane.

So presently Paul Bowser's scout captured a young chemical engineer from Michigan University who was selling rubber tires in Buffalo, N. Y., and converted him into the arena one night.

This was Ed George, and a very handsome youth in his untarnished state with classical Greek features, sympathetic eyes of a dark, liquid brown, and coruscating curls.

Success Story
I WAS THINKING OF THE SUCCESS OF the college boy who was a success story in the college days with a wrestling career.

It was a success story in the college days with a wrestling career. It was a success story in the college days with a wrestling career.

Stellar Performance With London
I THINK HIS BEST PERFORMANCE WAS on the night last he wrestled and allowed for three hours against Jim London, who had the other half of the world's championship, while the moon sank behind the waxy night on the Fenway Park fence and the first fingers of dawn swept the East.

It went three hours and ended with both athletes crawling out of the ringside rubbings into the ring with cigarette butts and bottle caps clanging to their skin. And when each had slithered like a lizard within arm reach of the other, there lay in a mutual paralysis until the referee called it a draw and let them keep their respective halves of the life.

Though they repeated the same performance in Buffalo some weeks later, I am told that it lacked the technical click in the crawling phase, as that Ed had a day or two of the collapse while Jim wiped some powdered resin from his eye.

Well, here he is again, a little punchy about the equator and slightly mathematically as to skin, but still fetching in his broad way. I would not dare to predict the outcome against Casey, because I suspect the wrestling people like to find out what I think and then do something different. Still, it has been some time since I last went to a skin rodeo, and I think I will be at this one for old time's sake.

Moore of Bees Named On N. L. All-Star Team

Diz, Carl On Same Squad

New York, June 25 (AP)—The all-star squad with which the National League hopes to make it two straight over the American League at Washington, July 27, was announced today by Bill Terry, boss of the hand-picked forces as a result of leading his Giants to a pennant last year.

The squad of 25 players selected by Terry after consultation with rival strategists, includes all the headlines and represents every league club.

The seven infielders named do not include a reserve third baseman. Last year Duke Whitney of the Phillies played the hot spot in the infield, but he was definitely out, but the chances are he will appear in the lineup.

Carl Dick, picked by Terry, was named as a reserve pitcher. He was named as a reserve pitcher.

LOUIS STOPPED SIX IN '36

SCHMELING A BARRIER

(This is the fifth and last of a series on "History Repeats" concerning the life of Joe Louis.)

After polishing off Campa and LeMay many skeptics doubted the ability of Louis and waited for his New York battle with Max Baer before deciding.

This affair took place in September, 1935, and Joe Louis Max right out of the gate in four rounds. The fight was a real one, and Louis was not afraid of eliminating Paolino Lendini in four rounds.

STARTED ON RETZLAFF
In 1936 Joe started impressively by taking care of Charlie Retzlaff in one round. Then came the whipping of Ed Cummings in four rounds. He was not afraid of the big fight with Max Baer.

Ed Don Primed For Casey Bout Danno, Clark In Weight Test

By JACK CONWAY

IF DANIEL WEBSTER, famous statesman and orator, were to drop down to his native Marshfield today, he would rub his eyes and show real astonishment as he watched Ed Don George, former world heavyweight wrestling champion, finish his training for his bout with Steve Casey of Ireland at a Cross-Country Post show at Fenway Park tomorrow night.

I don't believe Daniel ever attended a wrestling match such as they have today. He had his wrestling contests with rival statesmen, but his eloquence and statesmanship usually enabled him to win the decision.

As a youngster, I used to roam through the hills of Marshfield, and one of the points of interest that attracted me most was the little single room house on the Daniel Webster estate where the great Massachusetts statesman prepared his speeches and also took an occasional drink of good old New England rum.

There is an open fireplace in this little room house, and Daniel Webster would sit before it in a large easy chair as he napped away at his rum punch and prepared his speeches. Perhaps this is the proper setting in which to compare a masterpieces.

George trains on the lawn in front of the Webster House in Marshfield. This is an inn, but it is not located on the grounds of the Webster House. It is a small, one-story building, and it is not located on the grounds of the Webster House.

When Ed George isn't twisting necks and trying to score with painful holds, you will find him in his room reading literature. Don has a flair for good reading which he cultivated when a student at Michigan.

I once remember taking George to Damon Runyon's penthouse at a New York hotel. Damon was writing his daily column at the time. After greeting George and myself, Damon came out on a conversation while he looked over the papers.

Later Runyon questioned George about wrestling, while Ed asked Damon numerous questions about boxing. In addition to his interest in the classics, Don was anxious to get information about the sport of boxing.

Don Webster, probably the best of the great American wrestling champions, has a flair for good reading which he cultivated when a student at Michigan.

George HAS been training for his bout with Steve Casey of Ireland at a Cross-Country Post show at Fenway Park tomorrow night.
